Once there lived a king in Persia. He was distressed to find his people lazy. He wanted to cure them of their idle habits. So he had a big stone put in the middle of the road one night. Although it was very much in the way and people stumbled over it in the dark and even broke their bones, no one troubled to remove it. One day the head man's cart was overturned and a rider broke his arm as his horse fell over it and a chowkidar hurt his leg by striking against it. The stone lay there for more than a week, but none removed it. All cursed the stone and blamed the government for non-removing it.
